Your reality.

We recognise that it can sometimes be really difficult to imagine what your new space 'could look like', which is why we like to generate, in as many mediums as possible, a clear image of what success will look like. That's why our team of Interior Designers use software like Revit (CAD), which turns concepts to reality. This allows Powell clients to walkthrough a proposal, seeing the specification and placement of furniture and accessories, getting a feel for the transition from one space to another and even allowing people to see the textures and colours of spaces.

Take a look at some of our mock-ups, and then a real-life photo of the space, post-handover.

Sustainable workplaces.

Now, perhaps more than ever before, we are all aware of the climate emergency, and at Powell, we believe that it is our collective responsibility to ensure we are always striving to realise sustainable workplaces.

We will work with you to develop a joint-vision of success that meets all your requirements and needs, while ensuring an exceptionally low carbon footprint – not only in the design of your space, but in its operation today and into the future. We carefully calculate a space's existing and potential carbon footprint, taking both operational and embodied carbon into account. This means we consider the energy output of items such as lighting and heating while in operation, as well as calculate the energy required to manufacture and deliver these items; cradle to grave.

Our mathematic approach to identify and mitigate emissions is drawn from our expert staff, who are trained to recognise the lifecycle, maintenance needs, onwards recycling potential, and end of life options when it comes to furniture and fittings.

We re-use furniture, mending where possible and recycling component parts where needed. This extends to donating mended or surplus goods to local charities and other good causes.

We scrutinise our supply chain to ensure sustainability in all our work. This extends to the way our products and materials are made, how they're transported and their longevity.

Our staff are all aware of the climate emergency, and each member of staff is encouraged and incentivised to adopt a CO₂-friendly way of both working and travelling.

We strive to always ensure that our building, refurbishment and furniture packaging is kept to an absolute minimum. Where packaging is required, we work to ensure that it is both recycled and onwards recyclable.

Powell Green.

Our sustainability promise

Powell is dedicated to lowering the impact we have on our planet. We have chosen to work with local suppliers who have the same views on all aspects of furniture and build materials. Working with Powell is working for a better future. Invest in a practical, beautiful working environment while keeping a clear environmental conscience, and a healthy bank balance.

Our main suppliers utilise a significant amount of recyclable content in the production of their products. Considerable investment in their manufacturing plants has provided significant amounts of renewable energy, which is used in the generation of the new products. Their work on a circular economy, we believe, is vital and one we closely align to, ensuring our offering can complement their work.

Our renewed ISO 14001 certification is a promise to staff and clients alike that Powell is always working to identify and reduce our environmental impact. We always strive to reduce waste and improve our green action plan.

Pride of place.

Did you know, Powell Chairman, Richard H. Powell designed the Royal Thrones for the Senedd (formally 'The Welsh Assembly') in Cardiff?

The Thrones are used for official Palace business in the Senedd, most recently, the opening of the Sixth Session by her late Majesty Queen Elisabeth II, as well as for the first official visit by Charles III, where His Royal Highness was proclaimed King in Wales earlier this year.
